Budget Submission

5 August 1963

NarrativeGeneral:

The Photographic Intelligence Division (CIA Detachment-NPIC) produces departmental level photographic intelligence and provides photographic intelligence services utilizing all types of photography and pertinent collateral information in support of the Central Intelligence Agency both at Headquarters and in the field. The PID also provides qualified CIA photo interpretation and key administrative personnel to the NPIC Photo Analysis Group, and is responsible for their administration as personnel from PID assigned to PAG on 12-month tours of duty.

ILLEGIB The PID is engaged in the following major programs or activities:

1. The production of photo intelligence reports or services either as direct departmental support or as active support, with personnel and equipment, of the national effort.
2. The on-the-job training of new personnel in the form of formal and informal courses of instruction, travel, etc.
3. The development and maintenance of specialized substantive files.
4. The recruitment of new personnel.
5. The administration and logistical support of a constantly increasing T.O.

PID has four substantive branches and an operations support staff to effect the work indicated above.

Accomplishments - FY 1963:

In planning for FY 1963, no one could possibly have foreseen the tremendous increase of photographic input occasioned by the Cuban crisis. In addition, all personnel and equipment had to be moved to a new building with little or no interruption of work.

As an index to the constantly increasing demands for photo intelligence support
